

BEER 101

Lagers vs. Ales

Rising to the Top

LAGERS: Lagers are bottom-fermenting yeasts that fall to the bottom of the vessel during fermentation. This fermentation is done at cooler temperatures, around 41-48 degrees, with maturation at or close to 32 degrees. The result is a clean, well-rounded beer, the yeast working more thoroughly through the malt sugars.

ALES: Ales use top-fermenting yeasts that rise to the top of the vessel during fermentation. This fermentation is done at higher temperatures than lagers, around 60-75 degrees, and needs less time for maturation. Ales are characterized by their complexity and fruity/floral flavors and aromas.
